Rations. Under the present system of rationing the soldiers, it is probable that the men will be dissatisfied if they perceive that the — cost less than the stoppage and no refund is made to them of the supply of the latter, and the Commander-in-Chief considers that it is a measure of liberality rather than strict justice to provide finer bread at a loss to the Government and that good wholesome bread such as the men have been accustomed to can be supplied on fair terms to the soldiers. The introduction of Hospital Bread into general use for the daily ration would not sensibly affect the amount of balance usually payable to the soldier, while the bread at present supplied being of a perfectly wholesome kind, no other reason appears to exist for making any change; the Government are therefore of opinion that it is not advisable to make any alteration.	24th „	74, 75	Adjt.-Genl. of the Army.
